According to a survey conducted by OCCMundial , 60 percent of professionals consider that leadership is the main attribute of their superiors.

It is true, leadership is the managerial or directive skill par excellence , and it consists of having the ability to influence the way of being of people or a certain group of people, ensuring that the work is carried out with enthusiasm and focus on achieving goals and objectives.

Thus, a leader is much more than a boss: he is a person who has the ability to make wise and timely decisions to lead a work group and inspire it to achieve a common goal; is a person capable of taking the initiative, managing, convening, promoting, encouraging, motivating and evaluating to achieve the business objectives of an area or a company.

However, not all leaders are born that way: many are formed along the way. You can work on becoming one by following these 10 secrets:

- 1. Master your area. This is, of course, the first requirement: a leader MUST be an expert in their field. You must have sufficient experience to make projections and face crises, as well as to share your knowledge with others.
- 2. Trust yourself. A leader knows his talents well, but is also aware of his limitations. Therefore, you are able to make important decisions without hesitation.
- 3. Be of integrity. A true leader has a deep sense of justice. You are consistent in your thoughts and actions, and you treat the people around you with respect.
- 4. Be flexible. Stiffness cannot be part of your way of being and working. On the contrary, a leader must be flexible to modify the way of working and strategies when necessary.
- 5. Take your responsibility. Every genuine leader knows how to take the consequences, whether positive or negative, of their actions. Also, put pride aside to apologize when necessary.
- 6. Share responsibilities and achievements. Good leaders know that delegating responsibilities is not a threat to them. On the contrary, they know that it is important to empower their employees and celebrate successes together.
- 7. Be empathetic. That is, to generate a connection with the team members, attend to their needs and offer solutions to their requests.
- 8. Offer feedback. Write down the mistakes and successes of your work team, always in a respectful and cordial way. Also be willing to listen to the observations of others.
- 9. Prioritize communication. Recognize the work of others and offer growth opportunities to your subordinates.
- 10. Plan. Have the ability to put together a plan and establish strategies to achieve the objectives.
